

Hillary Clinton

In August 2009, the US Secretary of State, Hillary Rodham Clinton was hosted by the University of Nairobi for an interactive session.

She mainly dwelt on good governance and corruption. Her apt introduction of noticing 'Corrupt-free-zone' signs at the University, culminated in an interesting discourse on the twin aspects of corruption and governance affecting the African continent.

Secretary Clinton's visit came barely three years after US President Barack Obama (then Senator) visited the University and gave a high profile lecture on democracy. Clinton acknowledged this by observing that 'it is a pleasure to be at the University President Obama came as a Senator and delivered a very strong message.

She planted a commemorative tree at the University.
